The High Street was once a lively town. It had many shops. But, what if you can turn back time? A British TV program has done that. A group of (¹modern) shopkeepers and their families were sent back to 1870's. Through their experiences, they saw a (²century) of change when they were move (³forward) in time to the 1970's.

Victorian Era

In this time, there's the butcher, the baker, the (⁴carpenter), and the (⁵grocer). The shopkeepers had to learn the basics of Victorian (⁶trading). The bakers had a hard time with baking and worked from morning to the night. White bread was the most popular. But, because (⁷fresh) flour was difficult to get, (⁸poisonous) (⁹ingredients) were used! The butcher had to sell every part of a big pig. There was no (¹⁰refrigerator).

Edwardian Era

This was the golden age of shopping. Many shops started to sell (¹¹packaged) goods. There's the dressmaker at this time. Children were still working in shops. The baker shop became a tea shop. The customers were given the best service. But, the Edwardian high street was a difficult place for women and children.

It's the 1930

Life in this time was easier. The (¹²shopkeepers) could work less hours. Sugar was easy to get. There were lots of sweets and cakes! The Edwardian bazaar became a toy shop.

World War two

WWII made life difficult. Many of the goods were left almost empty in shops. The shops had to follow the wartime rules. Customers must decide to stay with (¹³ rations) or buy goods from the black market. Because there weren't much beef, the butcher had to sell (¹⁴ muttons).

It's the 1960's

Big changes came to the high street. Because meat, bread, and clothing were easy to get in the 1960's, the shops changed. The baker shop became a burger restaurant, the butcher sold hardware, and the dressmaker became a hair salon. The grocer became today's (¹⁵ self-service) supermarket.

It's the 1970's

This was a time of the convenient shop vs. the supermarket. When the supermarket was closed in the evening, the convenient shop was opened.
