

For Teachers:

Choi was a homeless boy who sang on Korea's Got Talent

Judge 1: Hello.

Choi: I'm Choi Sung-Bong. I'm 22 years old.

Judge 1: I saw your application this morning. Why did you left "family" blank?

Choi: I was in the orphanage when I was three. Then, I ran away when I was five after being beaten by people there.

Judge 2: Then, how did you live on since then?

Choi: I sold gums or energy drinks on the street. I had that life for about ten years.

Judge 1: Did you go to school?

Choi: No. I took a test to pass elementary and junior high school. High School was the first school I've been to.

Judge 1: You're unbelievable! Are you going to sing today?

Choi: Yes.

Judge 1: Do you enjoy singing?

Choi: I like singing because it's the first thing I liked after living in the street. I'm not a good singer, but I just like it.

Judge 1: Let me hear you sing.

Judge 1: I just want to give you a hug.

Judge 2: Why do you want to sing?

Choi: One day when I was selling gums at a night club.

I saw a vocalist who was singing on the stage.

I was fascinated. Since then, I started to like singing.

Judge 2: No matter what happens in this competition, I'd like to give you vocal lessons. Thank you for your awesome performance!

Judge 3: I think that you can tell what a great performance you've given us. You've done a great job.

Judge 1: Ok. Let's make a decision.

Judge 2: Yes, for me.

Judge 3: Yes!

Judge 1: Congratulations! You can go to the next round!

Judge 2: In his difficult life, he runs to what he really wants. Even talented ones don't have that passion.

Judge 3: His voice magically gets people to listen.

Judge 1: I was very glad to meet him. I just want him to be happy!
